“ I'm grieved to know of Steven's passing and that he suffered from ALS. What a wonderful man he was. I'd met Steven years ago at work. He had a little extra weight in those days and I'd been diagnosed with a bone density issue. We'd see each other in the gym at work and Steven dieted and was in optimum physical condition after that. I recall when he went to Laos for a funeral, I believe it was his grandfather, and he returned with his head shaved, as is the custom in his culture. We discussed our 401k; he was a savvy investor and a good saver. He told me once that his first name meant lion, or something like that and he joked that girls were afraid of him for that reason. When someone has passed everyone says what a nice person they were; in this case Steven was the nicest guy. We only ever had pleasant, enjoyable conversations. Steve's family and those who loved him have my deepest sympathy.
